

Communication is Key

Healthy church strategies for email,

websites,
social media,
and personal & congregational communication

Center for Congregational Health

Learn why communication is a key practice for a healthy congregation.

In this one-day conference, the Center for Congregational Health will share an overview of our research of the four key practices for a healthy congregation, including communication, and cultural, societal & global shifts in communication processes.

We will discuss internal communication skills like individual, staff & congregational communication (staff meetings, church policy, feedback, etc.) - all as the congregation relates to its own members.

We will also share external communication skills like marketing, branding, & interactive communication (social media, websites, & email) - as the congregation relates to its community.

Date Friday, February 3, 2012

Where Wake Forest University School of Divinity, Winston-Salem, NC
In partnership with Wake Forest University School of Divinity

Time 9 am - 3 pm (an optional tutorial is available from 3-4 pm)
Please bring a laptop or iPad. Parking instructions will be provided.

Cost $125/person - lunch is included.
For a group of 3 or more from the same congregation/staff, the cost is reduced to $100/person. Registration is limited, so please register early.

Conference led by Natalie Aho, Communications Specialist for the Center. Natalie is also a communications consultant for the Associated Baptist Press, Alabama CBF and CareNet Counseling Network and the former communications manager of CBF North Carolina. She is also a coach for SocialPhonics, teaching social media to ministers and non-profit leaders. She is earning her Masters in Interactive Communication.

Learn more and register at www.healthychurch.org or contact Robin Danner at congreg@wakehealth.edu or 336.716.9722.

CENTER for CONGREGATIONAL
HEALTH.